City approves one-time payment to Clark Golf Club

Clark City Council, Mayor Larry Dreher informed and discussed with the council his plans to aid the Clark Golf Course with (not to exceed) $30,000, in one time money, to repair a water pump. No action was taken at this time as two council members were not at the meeting and Dreher wanted full participation and representation from the center stage at the January city council meeting.

Mayor Dreher began the discussion stating his intentions and then listing all the areas in which the city helps with programs. This list includes: Clark Industrial Development Corporation - $77,000; Med Van - $31.000: Teener baseball program - $2,800; Swimming pool -$103,000; Parks - $43,000; Chamber of Commerce - $3,000; Fireworks This discussion and action took - $2,500; American Legion baseball

"The city owns this property," Dreher continued and spoke of the financial burden that could come with the city running the golf course. "That would not be a lot of fun," and he continued with several more reasons that he felt helped justify this $30,000 expenditure.

The Clark mayor concluded his remarks by reiterating that this

If 2013 is anything like 2012, success will be par for the course for Kaufman

For the second time in four years, Kim Kaufman has been named the South Dakota 2012 Independent Female Athlete of the Year. This is the second honor in six weeks, as Kaufman also was named the top collegiate women's golfer by Golfweek Magazine.

Kaufman, a senior at Texas Tech in Lubbock, Texas, is halfway through her last golfing season as a collegian. She is the daughter of Terry and Teresa

With her golfing accomplishments, Kim Kaufman has put Clark, S.D. on the map. 2012 was a very good year for Kaufman, and if things come together next fall, she could possibly become a household

But that could be called putting the cart before the horse and Kaufman has much to do before getting to that point, almost a year down the road.

Right now, it's qualifying for the NCAA National Tournament with her golfing teammates at Texas Tech University and then graduation from Texas Tech with a political science degree. Kaufman has maintained a 4.0 throughout her college career, even with a demanding extracurricular sidebar.

As a graduating senior to be, Kim said, in an interview when she was home over the Christmas break, that she's really looking forward to her Texas Tech golf team qualifying for the NCAA National Tourna-

"We've come really close, twice, making it to Nationals, and it really would be nice to finish college with a trip to Nationals," said Kaufman.

Qualifying a team to the National NCAA tourney is a two-step process. tourney, and then the top three teams from each region participate in the National Tournament.

"We've finished ninth at regions two of my three years. I really feel good about our chances this year, though," she said.

Following May graduation at Texas Tech with a degree in political science, Kaufman will pursue her opportunity of a lifetime, 'Q-school.'

'Q-school' is the shortened term of the LPGA qualifying school, a laborious, lengthy process to see whether or not a golfer is eligible to gain their card which allows one to golf on the pro golf circuit.

Kaufman explained that 'Qschool' has three different stages, in Florida, from September through "My goal is to stay consistent. I feel I will have to look to shoot par," she said of the rigorous competition, courses and amount of play.

The past several years have been sort of a stepping-stone process Sixty teams qualify for the regional Kaufman has been using to get ready for this 'Q-school' competition.

2012 Awards

Because of this, she has been rated the No. 1 women's collegiate golfer in the country by Golfweek Magazine.

Kaufman, a four-time state Class B high school champion in South Dakota, had an excellent fall season for the Texas Tech Red Raiders. She closed the fall season by averaging 71.5 strokes per round and finished in the top 15-including three top five finishes-in each of Texas Tech's four fall events. The highlight came when Kaufman shot a 5-under-par 67 to win the rainshortened Landfall Tradition in 2012 year in review - part two, the last six months

The second half of 2012 was highlighted by a fall harvest that was a very pleasant surprise to many area producers, and not so great for others, dependent upon Mother Nature's kindness, as to how much and when rain was received.

2012 was unusually dry in South Dakota. Much of the state suffered extreme drought conditions and it was the driest growing season in approximately three decades in Clark County as well. Although the county did receive some well-timed rains, producers didn't quite know what to expect and weren't treated equally. The northern half of the county received a big August rain that really made a difference.

A combination of good crops (for some, not all), strong prices due to the midwest drought and dry conditions that required very little drying of crops made the 2012 growing season quite memorable.
